

THE DRAGON WHO LOST HIS SPARK

Story 6 — A Story About Kindness and Warmth

Figure 1: Drake sitting atop Ember Mountain, feeling sad without his spark.

Page 1: The Cold Little Dragon

High on top of Ember Mountain lived a friendly little dragon named Drake. While all the big dragons could blow massive, colorful fireballs to light up the night sky, Drake could only produce a tiny puff of gray smoke.

Every evening, the dragons gathered to host the Great Flame Festival. They lit up campfire circles and roasted delicious sweet apples over their bright orange flames. Drake sat alone in the grass, feeling small and helpless.

"Try harder, Drake!" teased his big brother Ignis, blowing a fiery ring that spun into the air. "A dragon without a spark is like a bird without wings!"

Drake took a deep breath, puffed out his chest, and blew with all his might. But only a tiny, lukewarm hiccup came out. He buried his face in his green paws and cried softly.

Page 2: A Shivering Friend

Upset and ashamed, Drake wandered away from the noisy festival down into the Quiet Valley. The night air was chilly, and frost was beginning to glitter on the autumn leaves.

Suddenly, Drake heard a faint shivering sound coming from beneath a large oak tree. He walked over carefully and found Pip, a tiny blue bird with a injured wing, huddled in a pile of cold leaves.

"Brrr... it is so cold tonight," chattered Pip the bird. "I cannot fly home to my nest, and my feathers are freezing!"

Drake felt a big wave of sympathy in his heart. He didn't have grand fireballs like the bigger dragons, but he knew he couldn't leave his little friend in the cold.

Drake gently picked up Pip with his soft paws and held the little bird close against his tummy. He curled his wings around Pip like a warm blanket and hummed a soothing lullaby.

Page 3: The True Flame Within

As Drake cared deeply for his little friend, something magical began to happen deep inside his chest. A gentle, cozy feeling grew warmer and warmer, spreading through his tummy and all the way up his neck.

When Pip opened his eyes and chirped happily, Drake opened his mouth to laugh—and out burst a brilliant, glowing golden flame! It wasn't a harsh or destructive fire, but a cozy, dancing light that filled the dark forest with golden warmth.

The other dragons came flying down from Ember Mountain, astonished by the beautiful warm light radiating through the valley. They watched in awe as Drake lit up the dark forest gently without burning a single leaf.

"Your flame isn't born from anger or power, Drake," said the Elder Dragon softly. "It is born from kindness. You have found the most special spark of all."

MORAL OF THE STORY

True warmth comes from kindness and caring for others. What makes you different can often be your greatest gift!

